

The 'authorization' use case involves definition of policy rule for finding out which services are accessible to a user with given roles. With 'r' roles, 'f' features, 's' services, 'l' lines of businesses, the back-end would need to handle all  $r*f*s*l$  combinations in its logic. With OPA, the authorization functionality gets decoupled from the back-end logic.

